Greetings from Elephant Hills Luxury Tented Camp – Khao Sok, Southern Thailand!

As I am sure you are all aware over the past few weeks Thailand has seen protests in certain areas of Bangkok. This last week however has seen the beginning of a return to normality for the population of Bangkok with many people being able to go about their normal daily lives as of this Week. Last weekend saw many local Bangkokians joining with the army and police to help clear and clean the streets of the rubbish left behind after the demonstrations. Schools, banks and business opened their doors yesterday and an air of optimism lies in the city. We at Elephant Hills have been following the protests very carefully from our head office in Phuket and at our camp in Khao Sok and Just to reassure you about your clients travel plans to Thailand, not once did the protesters get near to Suvarnabhumi airport, the main hub within Thailand and Bangkok.

The majority of flights at Suvarnabhumi were on schedule and unaffected by the protests and this combined with the fact that Phuket (the closest international airport to Elephant Hills) has direct international flights means it is also possible to reach us directly via Phuket airport or transfer through from Bangkok with no problems.
